March Madness is underway, and this year has not disappointed with many upsets and twists. Lauren McComas, Nashville, Tenn., freshman, gives insight on her bracket and predictions for the upcoming games.

McComas does not have many pre-determined plans for watching the tournament games, but has joined a couple competitions between friends and family. She is hoping that Tennessee will bring home the hardware.

“I made a bracket with my sorority and my family, and I have Tennessee winning both,” McComas said.

McComas had spent the past weekend at the lake with friends and spent their time watching a few of the games.

“We watched the game together with my friends, but I wouldn’t host one because I like basketball but not that much,” McComas said.

Although she attends Baylor University, she has the Bears making it to the sweet 16 round.

Over the weekend she watched the showdown of the Texas Longhorns versus the Tennessee Volunteers. This game has been McComas’ favorite to watch so far in the tournament as it came down to the last few seconds and shots.

“Go Vols and they won, it was just a really great last couple minutes of the game, the whole game was actually really good,” McComas said.
